www.orchestra-instruments.com

Kamancheh (Kamanche or Kamancha) is the chief Persian bowed instrument. Kamancheh is a small fiddle with a long conical neck, a round wooden body covered in animal skin, and a spike protruding from the base. The instrument rests on the player's knee or on the ground and is swiveled on the spike to meet the bow as it is played. Traditionally kamanchehs had three silk strings, but modern ones have four metal ones. The strings are played with a variable-tension bow. the word "kamancheh" means "little bow" in Persia. It is widely used in the classical music of Iran, Azerbaijan, Uzbekistan and Turkmenistan, with slight variations in the structure of the instrument.
